Application Guidelines for the “Winter Seminar on Human Security Development through Energy Science”

Date: January 11-January 23, 2021

Place: Kyoto University (Japan)

※ Due to the spread of coronavirus infection, it is likely to be held online.

If it's held online, the program of the seminar is subject to change. (The classes and group work will be held online too, but field trip and cultural tour will not be done.)

I. Objective

This seminar is co-organized by the Graduate School of Energy Science (GSES) of Kyoto University and the ASEAN University Network-Kyoto University Student Mobility Program toward Human Security Development.

It is designed for undergraduate students to study the concept of Human Security Development (HSD) through Energy Science. The main theme of this seminar is energy science, which is an important issue for HSD. The participating students are expected to deepen their knowledge on HSD through energy science with the prospect of finding solutions to technological, socio-economic and political issues, focusing on the Asian region. The seminar will offer lectures and class discussions as well as organized field trips and cultural events. Applicants are not limited to engineering, economics, or science - all fields are welcome.

II. Criteria and eligibility

1. Applicants must be undergraduate students from ASEAN University Network (AUN) member universities (see Table 1 below) at the time of the seminar.

Note: The students who will leave their universities before the date of this seminar cannot apply.

2. Applicants are required to have a consistently good academic record in the previous academic year and a good command of English.
3. Applicants must be in a good health.
4. Successful applicants must attend all the classes and events in the seminar. (Not allowed to participate if you arrive late or leave before the end of the seminar.)
5. There is no limitation on applicants' fields of study or age.
6. Number of students to be admitted: 25 (※ Even if it's held online, that number is the same.)
